LETTER FROM PARSON BROWNLOW.

To the Governors of the Loyal States:

General Loring, the following that the crists of our national affairs is now upon us, and believing that the next sixty of the Government, or whether the rebellion is to prevail (I have a personal acquaintance with many of you—Governors Curtin, Morton, Tod, Morgan, Buckingham, Andrews, and others—and, I bear testimony that you have done much, and done it well, wisely, and in due time, to promote the best interests of our country in this the day of her trial; much remains to be done, and you, gentlemen, representing more than twenty States. have, it is now upon us and sounded of the same and you, gentlemen, representing more than twenty States. have, it is now the following officers are to be chosen, vir.—one for deapsir. Let me further impress upon your minds the startling fact that the rebel advances are simultaneous all over the country, and exhibit system, concert of action, with a zeal and talents displayed in the execution of their plana worthy of a let. ington, Baltimore, Harrisburg, and Philadelphia, are all threatened by an enemy that shows prodigious activity, talents, and strength. Indeed, they have us now where they had us thirteen months ago, with this addition, that they have invaded Maryland and Ohio. If they march upon us, and their daring plans are not properly met, and signally defeated, it will be our fault.

Now, I propose that you, as Governors of the loyal States, meet at some convenient point without delay, and as the representatives of your people, ad-dress yourselves, in unmistakable terms, to the civil and military authorities of the United States. I will not say what you shall tell them; but I will, with all due deference to your superior abilities. suggest a few points that you might make, and forcibly impress upon the minds of our authorities:

First, Urge the Government to draft, without delay, a half a million of men, in additition to the force already in the field and in camps of instruction .it will require less money to furnish, equip, and sustain a million of men for two years.
